

SIMPSON CENTERS ATTACK ON MRS. HALL

"The newspapers took up the case. Could a young woman have her throat cut and be buried without an autopsy? Could the murder be hushed up? Could these people be interviewed in their homes?

"Wealth could be brought up for murder. Wealth, with its satellites and legal talent, could be brought up for murder.

"They may not be convicted, but they have been held up to the public gaze.

"Senator Case has called me a nasty prosecutor. What did he want me to do—hold this trial in Mrs. Hall's parlor, with her liveried footmen to admit us? Mrs. Hall has been treated nicely. She has been allowed to go to her beautiful home every night.

"Your loving son, the Senator here, devoted an hour to vituperation against me.

"This woman, Mrs. Mills, came under Dr. Hall's spell. He was a great man. They do everything but say this woman was a harlot. She met a harlot's fate. Here are her 15-cent stockings, here are her little rundown brown shoes. Funny attire for a harlot!

"Don't let the bickerings of counsel fool you. It doesn't mean anything. Case is my good friend. I have a great admiration for McCarter. Whenever I get a case too difficult for me I go over and hire him.

Was Common Gossip

"Everybody in New Brunswick knew about this thing. It was common gossip. But Mrs. Hall didn't know it—she says. Mrs. Hall was several years older than her husband. She had money. She married Hall. Then he was hers—she had him.

"Why don't Mrs. Hall make her lawyers put Minnie Clarke and Gorsline on the stand? They don't dare do it. That pair couldn't stand a cross-examination.

"Minnie Clarke had a key to the church. She is the toady of the rich woman. She got the letters the day of the murder and took them to Mrs. Hall.

"Did she go out to commit murder? No more than you and I go out to commit murder. But this woman was taking her husband away.

"Look at her, stern and cold. I don't intend to abuse her, but look at her, her eyes. You saw her eyes on the stand, a cold, stern woman. Older than her husband, she had bought and paid for him.

"They met. There was a fight.

"Damn you, let go of me! They fought for the gun. It went off accidentally. That first shot was not intended, but it killed Hall.

"What to do? Those three were of one blood—they wouldn't tell on each other. But this other woman is an eyewitness. Bang! Bang! Bang! She gets it and goes down.

Filled With Hate

"This old woman, who bought and paid for her young husband, was filled with vehemence and hate.

"Look at her eyes! Look at those eyes, gentlemen!

"Let us consider her story of the murder night. Her husband was gone. She was frantic. She went to the home of Mills, the church janitor. Her life is wrecked; all is lost. But she doesn't even knock on Mills's door.

"Next morning she gets up. She hasn't been at the murder. But she called the hospital and asked: 'Any dead bodies found?'

"On the stand I asked her if she did not know that the word 'casualties' meant 'dead bodies.' She said 'yes.'

"Her lawyers shouted 'No, No,' but she said, 'Yes.'

"Then she goes to Mills. He suggests that they have eloped. She says, 'No, they've been together and they've met foul play!'

Puts Them Together

"How did she know that? She hadn't been at the murders. She put them together, yet she denies their affair.

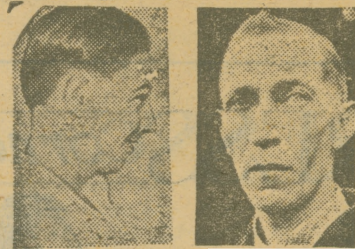

"On Friday she puts them together and kills 'em!

"The murder is not the nasty thing of this case. I'm letting you in on a secret.

"The nasty thing is that they are on trial. They never expected it. They couldn't believe it.

"This woman, a member of the family of Johnson and Johnson, whose coat-of-arms is a mustard plaster, asked Toolan, the Middlesex prosecutor, soon after the murder:—

"Won't you advise me about making a statement?"

"When Toolan told her he could not do that, she became very angry."

"After the murder, she had her
